What?

Entangled History

- is an international training where you can meet people from Germany, Poland and Ukraine interested in Holocaust Education and new approaches and methods of non-formal education,
- encourages its participants to develop and work on their own educational methods and offers to publish them in a methodological handbook,
- offers its participants an insight into the work of well-established institutions of non-formal educational youth work.

You will learn how:

- To use practical methods of non-formal education to approach such a serious topic as the Holocaust
- To bring together different perspectives on the same historical event
- To develop personal connections to such a topic with young people through family history
- To reflect critically upon historical education
- To develop critical thinking and grow awareness of the existence of more than one historical truth

Summary of the project

"Entangled History as a perspective for non-formal education" is a training for 18 multipliers of youth work from Germany, Poland and Ukraine. During the training participants will meet in order to learn and modify methods for the historical and civic non-formal education viewed in the context of a growing diversity in our societies. Due to globalization and migration our societies in Europe become more and more diverse. The field of non-formal education must take this challenge and needs to integrate this diversity into its project formats. Old narratives need to be uncovered and views from multiple perspectives on historical events have to be included.

The Holocaust as a focal point will be examined from multiple perspectives and conclusions on marginalized groups and discrimination in our current societies will be drawn from that. Further goals of the project are the consolidation of tolerance, giving an impulse on critical thinking as well as raising awareness towards diversity and against discrimination.

During the training participants get the chance to develop and modify methods that can be applied in the following international youth meeting (23.-28.02.2020) as well as in the everyday work of the youth workers.
